

Song Mountain Monastery / Song Mountain Academy - fictitious lineage of Nine Gate Kung Fu

Currently claiming to be a "Martial Buddhist Vajrayana Sangha, of the Ngakphang order"

UPDATE, MAY 2007: I haven't done anything with this fact site in years, but discovered the school discussed on this site is now run by a student that started with them a decade ago as a teen, "Ngakpa" Tony Fucina. They are now using (knowingly or unknowingly) fake Tibetan Buddhist credentials, changing the school style from Nine Dragons to Ninegate Kung Fu. Do NOT donate or support their basement "monastery", as it is run behind the scenes by fraud David Moerler, previously fake Shaolin priest, who apparently graduated to cult leader. Read the site, and it will all become quite clear ... more information may be forthcoming, and I accept any legal challenges to the facts on this site.

NINE CELESTIAL DRAGONS, JADE PHOENIX, SONG MOUNTAIN ACADEMY, NINEGATE, and many other names over the years ...

(Yes, This is the site the "monastery" warns all their new students about, never able to answer any of the accusations as they stand)

This site is dedicated to all the students, past and present, of Nine Dragons, Shaolin 9 Dragons, and the current martial arts school "Song Mountain Monastery" / "Song Mountain Academy" in Buffalo, NY.

May you have the courage to seek the truth for yourself, the wisdom to find it, and the strength to accept it.

The Reason For This Site

This site was created to give the other side of a complex story. Our objective is to reveal the Truth, no more, no less. We will try to be as objective as possible, but recognize emotional bias on the part of both writers and viewers.

Not looking for friends or enemies, this information is posted here in good faith, based on YOUR right to know. Whether a student or potential student of this school, here is our version, with documentation wherever possible. Among other things, we will attempt to cover the following topics.

◆ Biographical Information on "Si Tai Gung" David (Davyd) James Moerler

◆ Assessment of Actual Lineage

◆ Origin and development of the styles, forms, teachings, and techniques

◆ Chi Kung Safety

My name is Ken Stuczynski, a former member of the Nine Dragons Kung Fu Society, or "Shaolin Nine Dragons." I'm not quite a disgruntled student, but a disgruntled leader. I represent many of the system's former students when I write this.

I was the original sole instructor of the system when we started teaching the public in 1993, having been the head "regional instructor" before this, and for years was the highest ranking member under the "grandmaster" until things got strange in 1995. Under dire circumstance, I was forced to question the beliefs I had promoted for years in what is now called "Song Mountain Martial Arts."

David had put me in charge of philosophy and the historical records of the entire system, public and private. This was appropriate since I created the records, organized David's memoirs throughout the early development of the system, and because of educational background and interest.

I had earned my Philosophy Degree from D'Youville College (where I became one of David's first students) in 1991, but had studied Eastern philosophy, religion, and culture since I was 13 years old. It was this eagerness to find someone claiming to know such a spiritual path that made me not only interested in David's martial arts, but a devoted organizer of a system where others could learn as well.

This was a painful process for me -- one of faith and doubt, betrayal, losing innocence, and guilt for not seeing the truth before it was too late. After much healing, I give to you this site, not out of angst and revenge, but out of the hope I am giving others a chance to know the truth, and perhaps out of penance for having perpetuated such a myth for so long.

Shaolin is the stuff legends and myths are made of, but is not shrouded in lost history. More than one or two people taken advantage of scarce information on the subject and claimed Shaolin lineage and training. However, more and more information is accessible, thanks to changing attitudes in traditional schools, better preservation of documents, more translated materials, and mass information availability (especially the Internet).

I have nothing but the highest respect for Shaolin -- its principals and philosophy, its heritage, its practice and way of life. I would like to think that anyone reading this who has the same respect for what it stands for would want to know beyond any doubt if they are being duped into believing they have a lineage they do not.

"Si Tai Gung" David (aka Davyd) Moerler

There are no thousands of years of lineage. There is no lineage, period. David Moerler has never trained with or under anyone in Shaolin. He has had no communication, psychic or otherwise, with any temple in New York, Ohio, or China.

Real Shaolin in Buffalo

As far as I have found there is only one Shaolin Grandmaster in the Buffalo area, and he is retired in Amherst. I would be surprised if David even knows of him, but I know that he, nor any other Shaolin, knows of the "si tai gung." He is not some 30-year-old con artist with delusions of grandeur. He has a verifiable lineage and is respected in the martial arts community.

Religion

Home

NOTE: The below was written before it was discovered David and his followers changed their story to being of a TIBETAN Buddhist lineage instead of Shaolin. Of course there is no such thing as Tibetan Buddhist fighting monks who wear Shaolin robes and claim to have a Taoist heritage. It boggles the mind what people will believe. Even a little research will give one pause before buying such an elaborately evolved story.

Theologically, Shaolin is a form of Mahayana Buddhism called Ch'an (Zen). This does not mean they do not also study Taoism and Confucianism, but there are not "Taoist Shaolin Monks" per se. As for God, these belief systems do not directly address the matter, neither denying nor affirming the existence of a universal being.

Contrary to what stories you may have been told, real Shaolin IS NOT against any religion, including Wicca, or any form of Paganism, Shamanism, etc.. Most of the leaders of the "Shaolin" Nine Dragons school at least dabbled in some form of Witchcraft earlier in life. Sean in particular has no tolerance for any "magic" since a bad personal experience in his youth. David never denounced any religion to me, except for Satanism, which he supposedly practiced when he was in grade school. In college, he claimed to be born again, and carried his Ryrie Bible around with him everywhere for years.

In my own experience, some people's meditations and other spiritual exercises in Paganism have had a positive effect on their ability to manipulate body energy, as does Yoga and certain other disciplines.

On another note, I have been accused of not being qualified to judge a Buddhist lineage because I'm not a Buddhist (at least not on my name badge). Even though this has nothing to do with knowing his credentials are false both firsthand and through countless testimonies of people who knew David, they should be aware that I studied Buddhism long before I met him, and long after. What Song Mountain people take from possibly legitimate books and videos is as accurate as any other person who can read and see and practice, and they are welcome to any and all benefit from that. But calling themselves traditional and claiming a lineage with nothing more than a fanciful belief and facts to the contrary is dishonest. They are committing fraud every seminar they hold, no matter how good it is, and people have a right to know before drowning in a typically subjective experience such as meditation and have nothing to compare it to. If any of them truly respected Buddhism, they would want to take a closer look, or at least one would think so.

"The power of religion has been sorely underestimated by our scientists. No other force in history has been so effective at compelling human beings to say things in languages they don't understand"
- Mauve'Bib's introduction to The New Improved Testament of the Orange Catholic Bible, edited by Princess Serutan.

"He who knows others is wise; he who knows himself is enlightened" - Chinese Proverb

This page is devoted to demystifying the styles and forms taught by the Song Mountain school of Nine Dragons. Here are their true origins in relation to their student's experiences, including my own.

Styles

Wing Chun / Ving Tsun

David claimed to study the Southern style of Wing Chun in a New York City school apart from the supposed temple. Most of the information he passed down to me from this style were snippets and tricks from magazine articles, particular those things in the style that Bruce Lee used to form Jeet Kune Do. David was never able to perform any of the Wing Chun sets except one, "Si Lum Tau", and it was vastly incorrect.

Real Wing Chun involves many things David cannot teach because they are not available in books and videos, but has made an efficient use of many of its principles. When under pressure, I tend to slip into this up-close approach, as these skills come to me easily. In fact, after much self-study and training on my part, David returned from the Navy and in trying to asses my skills, he was unable to overcome my close-in techniques (sticky-hands, etc.). He was surprised, and blamed his surprise at my advancement as the reason I came out on top. From that point forward, I don't recall sparring him beyond controlled, limited drills.

Dragon / Nine Dragon

There is no traditional "Nine Dragons" style.

Forms

Si Lum Tau

A sort of abridged, simplified version of the "Si Lum Tau" ("Small Idea Form") of Wing Chun was taught to me by David in 1989-90, and he changed it several times since then. However, he always claimed it was the actual traditional form, and I did not realize otherwise until I consulted a number of books from various Wing Chun lineages.

David (aka "Davyd") James Moerler & Jessica (Reese) Moerler

Information on David is available throughout the site, particularly in the school history section.

I introduced him to his wife, Jessica. Ironically, he used my credit card without my knowledge or permission to buy her engagement ring. She had no previous martial arts experience, and I can only describe her as a survivor by any means necessary, and is spiritually strong but chaotic. She may not as smart as she can be vengeful or vicious, but I don't recommend getting on her bad side.

Sean Garbach

Sean met David in the Navy and became one of his most devoted followers. When I invited him to Buffalo for a get-together of my closest friends, he stayed, moving in with my sister Lori. They had a child out of wedlock, named David James after the "grandmaster," which was shortly before she died from diabetes. "Baby David," as he was called for years, is the half-brother of my God-daughter who lives with her aunt in Maryland.

Sean quickly adopted my "family" of friends as his own, along with various traditions I had started over the years, including the celebration of Little Christmas on January 6th. At first I thought he was the senior student of David's, only to find I was supposedly of higher rank.

Especially after Lori's death, he seemed to develop a sense of rivalry or jealousy towards me, particularly in relation to David. He tried unsuccessfully to hold classes many times, but could not handle the responsibility. To quell his difficulty in accepting my authoritative place in the system, David changed the ranking system and titles a number of times. Once, instigated by a personal matter, he challenged me and later backed out, under the pretense of brotherly peace. It is amazing I trusted him after seeing how easily and often he pitted people against each other, including my fiancée at the time and myself.

Even though he avidly plays with the arts, his ability comes more from brawn than from skill. Having little formal training (Japanese), he has a preference toward brute intimidation, and we still joke that if it wasn't for having a crotch and a throat, he would have no way of hurting us. In other words, if you're going to spar him, wear a cup. Many people never made it in the school because of him. He made a habit of being unnecessarily hard in contact activities, particularly towards women, and took his time when someone tapped out.

His "skills" as an "apothecary" are limited to what he has read since 1994, as David had nothing to teach him. His herbal remedies can even be dangerous, although most are not because they are common knowledge instead of home-brewed, uncertified concoctions. Warning: anyone in Chinese medicine who has the knowledge to give anything above basic advice or prescription is an actual OMD (Oriental Medical Doctor) and would be certified by the State as well. He has been known to push drugs (herbal) onto people, and has no formal medical background. Even in real Shaolin, they have a university degree for this sort of thing.

He also tried to play the philosopher and was always eager to make judgments as to what religion or belief is better than another. I have had to correct him endless times on points in Buddhism and Taoism, and the schools aversion from Wicca and Paganism come from his own personal experiences.

A couple of years ago, he married one of my previous students, becoming involved before realizing he was one of the people I gave warnings about. Trish is a wonderful woman, and I miss being in touch with her. Although I would have wished her better, apparently she is happy and treated properly, and that is of the highest importance. I hope this never changes, but if it does, Sean will answer for it.

Pete Powell

Whereas I cannot say for sure whether Sean really believes what he is doing in martial arts is real, I doubt Pete even cares. To him, life is one big fish story, and he is a self-proclaimed expert in anything and everything until he actually has to do it.

Like Sean, he met David in the Navy, and moved up to Buffalo and in with Sean about a year after Lori died. He was known mostly for being a loud, self-admitting "Masshole," wearing "Big Johnson" shirts all the time -- unless he was in uniform, pretending to be praying on his "prayer beads." He didn't seem to take sides on anything, but in the end was always inseparable from Sean.

He had some experience in sport martial arts, but couldn't have learned much from David because his skills were so weak and unrealistic, many new students of his could easily take him.

Tony Fucina

Tony started studying with Nine Dragons early on when Pete started teaching in 1995. He had actual training in kung fu before then (7 Star Preying Mantis if I remember correctly), and it showed -- unlike Sean and Pete, sparring him always made me work up a sweat.

He gives the school far more credibility than the school gives him, and I do not believe he is part of the deception. He reminded me of myself, trusting and eager to learn from anywhere he could. Of all their students, I have highest hopes for him, and when he realizes the truth, it will deal a great blow to the school.

Although he is no longer teaching at SUNYAB (his previous college), they still keep reference to him on their martial arts club site. A link can be found HERE; a copy can be found HERE.

Unbelievable (2007-2008)

A new website, YouTube channel, Blogspot, and MySpace ... all for a school that all of a sudden decided it was a Tibetan Buddhist "monastery" ... knowing what I know firsthand, I'm at a loss what to say, except sorry I devote so little time to this site to keep the public aware of what is going on.

But I got my badge of honor ... one of their students, Donald J. (omitted for privacy) -- someone who otherwise I'd just as likely have ended up best friends with now that I researched him -- did the typical cult response I've seen a million times: I'm jealous; I shouldn't talk about things I (supposedly) don't practice; I'm projecting my own neuroses. Always attack the attacker (see Scientology's "Dead Agent" tactic) ... and he ironically accuses me of lacking Buddhist ethics. Under the circumstances, I easily forgive you, Donald, and if you're reading this, you'd be better off coming over for tea than talking so out of place like you have without taking the time to get your facts straight about me and what I know firsthand. I think you'd be pretty surprised if you knew my spiritual history, including before I met David.

News Flash: Within weeks (perhaps days) of us linking to the "official" Song Mountain website, they took it down. This is the second time their site just up and disappeared from the web. There is talk of a new site/location, redesigned a bit, but for now we will shortly post a copy of their last Geocities site.

ALSO, a posting of feedback from over the years, good and back, will be archived here, including emails from schools and styles David claimed to have learned -- even a representative of the family that has use of the name Penjak Silat Serak. A Personal Message

To the current members of "Song Mountain Monastery" -

I deeply mourn any hurt caused by my posting the information on this site. I do not question your individual sincerity, and certainly not your faith. In fact, I envy your living of a tradition you believe you are following. I myself have studied Buddhism and made it part of my life -- even as a Christian -- since I was about 13 years old. I am currently a non-professional, non-denominational minister, and my calling is for peace between those of different creeds, finding kinship in the nameless ultimate truth underlying all paths.

Posting this does not imply that those who follow Tony and David (or any con or cult) are more gullible or unintelligent than the next man. It is your open-mindedness and desire to learn that was used against you, as it was for me. And if you are reading this, I sincerely appreciate your patience with accusations that I would guess do not fit into the framework of understanding you have been indoctrinated into over whatever period of time you've been involved. Having only one controlled source of "inside" information is the key to psychological control that you (by its purposeful nature) would not even be aware of. Defending against and being resistant to any contradictions of that framework is not only natural, but encouraged by those who have mastered that art of influence. Doubt or critical consideration of other possibilities is the greatest danger to such control. But you owe it to yourself, because one cannot know truth from lies without weighing both.

So what is my motivation? What am I fighting against, if not any of you personally? My issue is with illegitimate, dishonest sources of knowledge, even though the knowledge may have value. I especially cannot sit by as others use meaningful spiritual teachings as a cover for their own hidden purposes. That is what some people do -- they borrow the good and true, maybe add a little to it, buying credibility by claiming it as their own, and if people's lives are better then the ends justify the means -- and whatever karmic price that eventually must be paid, knowingly or not. It may give you tremendous meaning in your life, but it is still a slap in the face to the very thing it pretends to honor.

I do not hide that setting this particular thing straight is personal -- I solely started the school that became what you now call "Song Mountain" on behalf of your "venerable teacher" while he was in the Navy, back in 1993 and was the reason David, Sean, and Pete came to Buffalo those following years. David and I were like brothers in College before that time (at least to me), long before the stories of any secret lineage started. I more than anyone know the truth, even though I wouldn't see it until it was too late. The David that I and his friends and family know is not the same "Davyd" mythos you have taken for granted without question.

You can choose to gain whatever benefits you may find from staying with "Song Mountain" but must accept the consequences. You are promoting a list of fake lineages that if perpetuated long enough will become an inaccurate part of history. You are selling "blessed" objects under the pretense of credentials that are simply not true. And you will encounter many people over the years who will look at the total lack of verifiability in your status as traditional, ordained disciples, that you will embarrass yourselves to those in the know and only hurt the image of others who preach the Dharma to those who do not.

I do not know to what benefit David has done all this. It could be power, or financial gain, or simply a game. Perhaps he actually believes all of it and his real family and friends need to collect him so he may get help, if that were possible. I wish I knew. This sounds like insult perhaps, but it is merely a frustrating, lifelong, dull sorrow to me, and the only thing left is put my own feelings aside and warn others at this point.

My hope is for you to not only consider "my story" but to reach out to real Tibetan Buddhists and other martial artists. This will give you a reality check in two ways. First, it will de-isolate your sources of knowledge so you can determine the validity of what you know as well as the truth (or lack) of your school's background. Secondly, it will keep you aware that whatever you seek can be found, not in any particular school, but within yourselves through the help of many sources outside what you may end up needing to leave behind.

The path is hard and painful, and requires either great courage or great disillusionment to take that step. For me it was the latter, and I hope for you it will be the former. Either way, I have taken that step and I offer to be there for you if you decide to move on. But if you succeed, keep what is useful and meaningful and make it truly your own.

As for Tony, I am not convinced he believes all he has been told about his teacher's past, but not convinced he does not believe he is telling the truth when he himself passes down the story of your school. Maybe the lie is worth more than the truth from his perspective. But the ones who knowingly have passed on the lie to make David Moerler credible include his wife Jessica, Sean Garbach, and Peter Powell (if he is still around). They were around before and during the time in 1995 when everything got bizarre, and I highly doubt they do not know for a fact that the whole background of the school, i.e. David's past, is anything more than illusion -- a secret they keep for whatever their own reasons. The newer followers likely do not know the truth at all and meant not to deceive you. Be sure not to lay blame carelessly, and if it is within your power, extend compassion -- even if only within your hearts -- to those who actually have betrayed you.

On last note: this site was put up long before there was any talk about Tibetan Buddhism being part of the myth. Before 1996 at the earliest, there was not even a hint of any religious tradition in Song Mountain, as it was "mystical" in flavor only -- it was a kung fu school run by a supposed 36th generation Shaolin grandmaster (David) that was "opening to the public", and ironically I was the only one really interested in the spirituality of the art. The very idea of the school eventually turning into a religious community was as much of a shock to me as it might be to you that it could be otherwise.

Be careful what you believe, as all belief has consequence. Truth is more than intention and action, and with even the slightest knowledge of what could be true comes responsibility.

My peace to you, no matter what your decision,

Ken

Original Shaolin 9 Dragon Website

Published to the internet in late 1996, this site never had an update with articles or any other content. "Dragon Sphere" was to be a martial arts supply business, similar to Iron Circle, owned by Ken Stuczynski.

It contains an outlandishly unlikely listing of styles and forms taught, and interesting biographies of the teachers and "grandmaster".

When the "Fraud Alert Site" went live, the website was almost immediately taken down by their web host, the owners of which were former students. These students, like many others, had various complaints about how women were treated in the school. CLICK HERE

A copy of their site was captured and used as "evidence" on the Fraud Alert site.

David J. Moerler Fraud Alert Site

The information in this site was originally published in February 1997 in response to the original "Shaolin 9 Dragons" website. Since that time, there has been one complaint, a few criticisms, and much thanks and approval from martial artists around the world for taking on this matter publicly. The number of hits from from this page (February 1997 to June 1998) totaled over 1700.

The contents are the result of a year of research, interviews, and private investigation. It later added a strong message: "I take full responsibility for the validity of the statements below, and openly accept any challenge legally or otherwise against it. The details are accurate as of at least the end of 1997."

Both sites continued to receive regular visitors on an almost daily basis until the traffic was forwarded here.

Song Mountain GeoCities Site (2000)

This last site never seemed to be "live" and got little traffic. Hosted on Geocities, it ran from about August 1999 to January 2001. Although it is permanently archived as it was, I cannot even reproduce it here properly because of its unnecessary complexity of frames, which made it a nightmare to view at 800x600, and impossible in Netscape Navigator because the navigation was in a small inline frame with scrolling. In other words, whoever built it shouldn't quit their day job.

The ironic thing about their site, besides taking it down right after I linked to it (coincidence?), was that students often found THIS site while looking for their own.

The site may not be reproduced here in all its content, but maybe someday part of it will be with survivable navigation and sans a few wacky backgrounds which were distracting or made it harder to read. The Geocities advertisements will go, too. Of course, the content itself will remain as it was for the world to see. Once it is up, feel free to compare this site (and its claims) with their earlier one (above).

The key to understanding the Song Mountain system of martial arts is the life and experience of the central figure of the "grandmaster," whose legal name is David James Moerler.

Around the age of 6, and after an allegedly dysfunctional childhood, David's mother died of natural causes. She was Chinese by blood, but had been adopted at birth by a German-American family and had no contact with her biological family.

This is in contradiction to David's claim to have learned Lin Quei, a Chinese vagabond martial art, from her mother's side of the family. To this day and perhaps indefinitely, he may have no specific knowledge of his mother's actual bloodline, and the odds of such knowledge are ridiculously small. He fabricated this myth at a time when Ninjitsu (which historically may have been derived from the Chinese Lin Quei) was popular.

Around 1992, he started the myth that he was recruited by the US military for special ops at the end of grade school, and had done covert operations in South America and other places. He said this explained his disappearances of a day or two at a time during College, and was why he started a higher rank than usual in the Navy. Actually, he started as the lowest class seaman and never was promoted his entire Naval career.

Raised by his grandmother and an aunt and uncle, he went to a typical high school in Central Long Island. (Contrary to David's version of the school, none of the present security existed at that time.)

The claims that he is somehow related to both the Chinese and Italian mafias is ridiculous. He even told me the big New York City crime boss that was killed in the late '80s was his uncle.

The Poison Clan

David had never taken a formal class in any martial art, but since late grade school was an avid hobbyist when it came to martial arts, being obsessed with analyzing and practicing things he came across in movies, books, and magazines. He played martial arts with his friends, and started a club, sort of an inside joke taken too seriously, called "The Poison Clan School of the Arts", after the movie "The Five Deadly Venoms."

TPC ("The Poison Clan") was supposedly a roundtable of teenage martial arts masters of various ranks and styles training together as an underground school. In fact, there was no actual school, and none of them were masters. In fact, few if any even studied martial arts of any kind.

David claimed that the co-founder of TPC and its philosophy (called "R.O.N.A.I.I." -- Refining Our Natural Attitudes/Abilities And Inborn Instincts) was a master swordsman of world class caliber, having beaten a famous Chinese weapon's expert. This was his best friend John, who briefly studied fencing.

Although they went to New York City occasionally, in reality TPC had nothing to do with gang involvement or David's leadership of "The Silver Dragons," which may or may not have even existed. It is likely that David has never even been in a real street fight, a sharp contrast to the never-ending trail of gang stories.

Most notable during the "Poison Clan" period was his attendance with John at a martial arts demonstration. The school was run by Sifu Tonny Kho, whose modified name David years later transmogrified into legend as his late Shaolin master.

The "Shaolin Temple"

▲ Up
▶ Next

It was from the ages of 12 to 16 that he was supposed to have trained up to eight hours per day at a "Shaolin Temple" on Long Island. This claim is documented on videotape from a seminar he spoke at in 1994. He always had a story to tell about experiences he had there.

This Shaolin myth started around 1993, where he proclaimed he was a Shaolin priest since years before. When asked why he never said anything before, his answer was a simple, "you never asked."

According to him, his "teacher" from a "Shaolin Temple" in Long Island is dead and the temple "closed" coincidentally as some of his students attempted to find it for ourselves. Actually, the school he took this legend from is one he and his best friend visited for a free lesson, and it still exists. His "master's" name, which David pronounces like a Japanese name -- /tu-NEE-ka/ -- is that of a master still living, who runs the school, "Tonny Kho." If there is any doubt this is the case, it is eliminated by realizing that one of the "styles" David claims to teach is actually the name of one of Tonny Kho's ancestors in the arts, and not a style at all.

Personally trained in Foo Joon Lin Kuei, consisting of survival skills, self defense and various wilderness Skills and Chinese folklore of Southern China's origin. Over twenty years experience in the martial arts, eleven in teaching. Sole founder of Shaolin 9 Dragons Kung fu as a conglomerate of several Shaolin and various other Chinese arts and Sciences pieced together without reduction in order to create a complete martial and health art to enhance quality of life and refinement of spirit in the Shaolin tradition. A disciple and Priest of Shaolin under the Diamond School of Natural Shaolin Arts, in Chan Buddhism, ordained minister backed by Sacramento Ca. There is difficulty in New York State and its recognition of Buddhist and Taoist philosophies. Within the 18 Classical Weapons of Chinese Kungfu we offer 52 variations. I am also qualified to teach varieties of Indonesian weaponry .

Trained under Sifu Tahn Nie Kho founder of Night Leopard Strikes form the Cave Kwoon to attain a Fourth Level Black Sash in the following: Ho Mei Pei (Shaolin art that stresses large circular movements, powerful striking, advanced weapon work with carry over into empty hand fighting sets). Hao Peng (Shaolin art specializing in eight gates, angular and indirect attacking methods such as groundfighting, contains Northern Monkey, Northern Dragon, Five Elements and the Nine Emotional Fist) Hung Pei (Stresses Five Animal influence, Nature Fist Boxing, a large quantity of Chin na and throwing arts) Guru Pentjak Silat Serah also awarded by Sifu Tahn Nie Kho, an abstract Indonesian art form consisting of breathing exercises, transcendal and imitative meditations to reach higher consciousness, Fighting theories and concepts mainly, only a handful of actual prearranged techniques.

Black Sash Wing Chun under Master Jonathon Goh, a small variation of Moy Yat style of Wing Chun. This style stresses close in fighting techniques heavily reliant on the hand techniques and foot work accompanying and maneuvering for proper angular attack.

Yang and Chen style Taijiquan under Master James Ho and a number of his associates, we teach four complete hand forms including applications both for health and self defense. Also as part of the Taiji curriculum both static and fixed step pushhands as well as a Taiji Jiann Set (double Edge sword) and a push hands form. Later training will be made in the Shaolin Modified Yang Set and the Taiji Darn Dao (saber) will be offered as they are currently under study by myself, Kung fu is a lifelong learning process.

Tong Bei Quan, Seven Star Mantis were both studied under Master Hau Se Fong, my teacher's teacher, as well as advanced weapon sets in Shaolin Kung fu. Under his tutelage, I am able to teach the following animal styles, White Ape, 5 Family Monkey, Seven Star Mantis, Yin & Yang Mantis, Snake, White Cobra, Golden Python, White Crane, Golden Leopard, Bear, Scorpion, Tiger, and From 9 Classical varieties of Dragon 27 of the 36 variations. Our non-animal essences include Nature Fist, 5 Element, Beggar's Fist, Drunken Style and Drunken Eight Immortals.

My personal experience has also drifted into the Japanese arts of Yokonshu ryu Ninjitsu and Aikido which I have an honorary black belt and black belt respectively in. In the past I have also studied Shadow Eagle, Choy Lat Fut, Hung Gar, Heaven & Earth Hsing I, and Pa kua Chuan but none to any significant rank at this time.

The training of Kungs or Great Skills as they are often called requires total dedication and are offered to our most trusted students at the advanced levels. these include Iron Palm, Iron Vest, Muscle Tendon Change, and Stone Dragon. As head of this system I have studied nearly 30 of these Kungs and allow training in them after the above four have been studied.

Davyd J. Moerler Fraud Alert

David in 1994, wearing what he called a special "teacher's belt" -- actually a common wushu belt.

Old Shaolin Nine Dragons Website ...

The kung fu cult "Song Mountain", formerly known as "Shaolin Nine Dragons" or "Nine Dragons Shaolin Kung Fu" in Buffalo, NY is teaching under fraudulent claims. The self-proclaimed Grandmaster ("Si Tai Gung"), David Moerler, is a long-time con artist and fraud. He claims to have been a Black Sash, ordained a 34th generation Buddhist Priest at a temple on Long Island that never existed. Quite a claim for someone who would have been in high school at the time. To this day, even those closest to him think his legal name is Davyd, and believe he was given the pseudo-Chinese name "Nu Nei Chu Yang Foo." This name supposedly came from the Chinese side of his family he and his mother (adopted into a white family) had no contact with.

The name he used for his late master is actually taken from a living teacher, Tonny Kho, near where he lived. However, he never actually became a student there, or anywhere else, and admitted to some that all his knowledge came from intensely studying books, magazines, and movies. He also studied psychology extensively, and if anything, became a master of mind tricks and sleight of hand.

From 1990 to 1995, I unknowingly promoted his folklore to others. The "story" of how his system began included a NYC gang of martial experts (with himself as the leader) known as "The Poison Clan." In reality, this was an inside joke between him and his best friend, borrowing it from the movie, The Five Deadly Venoms. He also claimed to have won by combat the title of leader of a NYC gang called the Silver Dragons. There is also no record of him in tournament listings, although he supposedly held a New York State title.

Perhaps worst of all, he claimed to have learned secret vagabond arts from his pure Chinese mother, who was adopted into a white family, and had no contact with her Chinese heritage since she was only months old. Regardless, he claims to teach "his family's secret art" -- Lin Quei.

The website of "Shaolin 9 Dragons" ran from October 1996 to January 1997. His biography has changed several times over the years, becoming more and more outlandish. Keeping in mind he was born in 1970, read what he claimed to teach at that time.

Click HERE to view their old Website

Note: There is NO affiliation between The Buffalo Connection (their ex-host) and "Shaolin 9 Dragons" or its current school. There is also no affiliation between "Shaolin" Nine Dragons and the Nine Dragons registered by Ken Stuczynski.

[More Questions & Answers,
Inspired by Readers...](#)

After falsifying information to get financial assistance to go to D'Youville College (where we met), the law caught up with him. After two semesters, he was forced to go into the Navy to avoid a jail term for IRS fraud -- he failed to report income from doing contracting work without a license, and was using multiple social security numbers. During his totally unpromoted naval career of four years, he was almost discharged for mental problems, but continued to make himself to be a martial arts guru. He gained students, some of which settled in Buffalo to join my circle of friends and help me teach locally. This time, he decided to be a Shaolin Priest, something he supposedly didn't tell us previously because "we didn't ask."

After severe business problems between the students in Buffalo, namely credit card fraud, embezzlement and theft, his motives and identity came into question. He claimed affiliation or acquaintance with everyone from Mantak Chia to the Dhali Lama. He recently led his students to believe he had exclusive information from a "temple", later to discover anyone could order videos from the source!

But it did not end here. Almost everything he told people in his travels, in Florida, or Buffalo, or on the open sea, was either a lie or a delusion. He took stories from biographies of people like Bruce Lee, and made them his own, depending on who he talked to. The truth has been hidden about his real family life, his Naval career, and the abandonment of his children. Instead, his life is filled with spy stories, supposed ties with the Italian & Chinese mafias, falsified satanic experiences, and faked illnesses and psychological regressions. It appears nothing anyone knows of him can be taken for granted anymore.

I have slowly discovered some of the real origins of the mish-mosh of the martial techniques he teaches -- even historical and cultural information was fabricated or blurred. Please remember, any dealings with him personally or professionally, are potentially dangerous, and the students who realized the truth but stayed to train will discover many flaws in their knowledge in the years to come. If anyone finds additional information that relates to this research please contact me by e-mail.

Questions & Answers

Who is Nine Dragons?

I, Ken Stuczynski, claim sole responsibility for the school registered with Erie County, New York, under the name "Nine Dragons Kung Fu Society." I registered this name to legally secure my claim to it, as I have taught it longer and to more people than has anyone in "Shaolin 9 Dragons." Plainly, my reputation is at stake.

Are YOU a FRAUD?????

I thought I was a 35th generation Shaolin student, but instead turned out to be a 2nd generation improviser. As a matter of fact, not long ago I would take immediate offense to anyone falsely claiming to be Shaolin.

However, a fraud is someone who is not what he claims to be. A Chinese proverb states that one with a clear conscience need not fear a knock on the door at midnight. I am heartbroken to have found out that I was living a lie these past years. I no longer claim to be Shaolin, as I unknowingly did these past years. Do you know what it is like to find out your master is a fake? Loosing thousands of years of lineage & heritage overnight is worse than any kick in the groin. But more so I am ashamed that I had not opened my eyes to the truth sooner, and involved many others into the pseudo-Shaolin cult group of "Shaolin 9 Dragons."

How long have you known?

Since early 1996, though I had not associated with the school for some time before this. I was "weaned" out of the system, shortly after my investigation of "Shaolin Priest" David Moerler started and the "Grandmaster" realized I was on to something. However, I look back and could kick myself for not listening to warnings from people and events. My educational background includes a BA in Philosophy with a minor in Psychology. I have studied Eastern thought years before my martial arts training, since I was twelve. Yet I broke the cardinal rule of a philosopher -- I failed to be objective about my own belief system.

What happened that convinced you?

My concern started in November 1995 when David (aka Davyd, etc.) faked amnesia and blamed it on Shaolin. Him and his friends from the Navy who settled here to be part of a school robbed my business blind (IRON CIRCLE Martial Arts Merchandise & Supply), and when a common friend helped me realized this, I tried confronting him. Trusting him for so long as a Brother and Spiritual guide, I knew he knew what was going on, refusing to believe at the time he was a key player, along with his fiancée, Jessica Reese. Anyway, he broke out into a faked seizure, jumped into a martial arts stance, collapsed again, and was rushed home before the ambulance arrived (I called 911 even though Jessica tried to stop me). For the next day or so, Jessica would not allow anyone to see him except Sean Garbach ("sifu" in charge of Chinese medicine). It was explained that he had amnesia, but only about some things, i.e.. the business (David and I were partners, with all my money of course). No one was supposed to talk to him about it as Sean and Jessica insisted that "Shaolin" purposely made him forget about anything that would interfere with his "mission" to open a temple in the next few years. How convenient....

This story is ridiculous! Why should anyone take your word for it?

Don't take my word at all. I'm just dying for a libel suit. That is where, in addition to all my notes, my lawyer brings out my "care package" in her possession, which includes a taped interview with Sean Garbach detailing the events I just mentioned.

Have you considered this might be true?

Yes. I realized a while after this event that one of three things were true. Either Shaolin screws with people's heads, David was mentally incompetent, or he was faking it to resolve conflict that would incriminate him.

What else happened?

Too much to mention here, except for the most obvious: Green Dragon Studios. David's supposed temple on Long Island where he studied never existed. To cover himself, he convinced everyone his master died (based on a real-life master who is still alive and teaches the main arts David claims to have a 4th degree black sash in since he was 19). The temple supposedly closed, too. Shaolin was "downloading" forms and knowledge into his mind from China or wherever.

According to him, he started getting personal instruction from Sifu Allen, who ran a Shaolin temple in Ohio or New York. When some students realized the videos from Sifu Allen were from Green Dragon Studio who advertises in Inside Kung Fu, he added to the story. Things like "Stone Dragon" were found to be "Stone Warrior" kung in their catalog, after David told them Green Dragon would not sell such things to the general public. Like myself, his students looked the other way, rationalizing with him. He collected their $100/tape, only to show students certain parts, being sure to edit out what he called "personal parts" directed specifically to him from Sifu Allen.

But couldn't it still be true?

Not according to Sifu Allen. I have signed documentation proving David had no contact with him at all, except for being a customer, ordering a few videos that are otherwise available to anyone with cash in hand.

So if your master is a fake, why do you call yourself a master?

I don't. Without my insistence, most of my students over the years call me Sifu, meaning "father-teacher." I willingly accept this, as this is how strongly I feel towards my students. I live my life on the axiom of respecting those who have went before me (elders, ancestors, masters), and love all others as my own children.

But you don't have any REAL training!

Oh, really? My "master" was still very skilled, and passed down a tremendous amount of information, even if he did get it from "Karate Kid" and endless magazines, books, and movies. The trouble is weeding out the false information and fake legends. Apart from stories, the techniques have served me and my students well.

Besides, he was in the Navy during most of my early training, which in his absence I took very seriously. I yearned for the spirituality that came with Eastern martial arts, and with or without him found it. To this day, it is an important (vital) component of my life and lifestyle. I filled in the gaps with new knowledge from other systems and my own creativity, much as I believe the ancient masters had done. More importantly, as a "student-teacher," I passed

So what style(s) do you claim to teach?

None. When people want to learn specific things, I refer them to another school whenever possible. I teach many principles from Tai Chi, Wing Chun, etc., but DO NOT TEACH THESE STYLES. I simply provide some fundamental knowledge in common sense martial arts, using primarily Chinese techniques and body motions/alignments. I teach what I have learned on my own and by teaching.

What about Chi and Chi Kung?

As in other areas, I would give up my next incarnation to study under a master. However, I have done much research in this area. I have no problem with "one-inch punches," Tai Chi pushes, generating heat in the hands, etc., and can sense many things physically and mentally/emotionally about my students without sight or physical contact. I do not consider these to be exceptional abilities, and my students learn to experience their own natural body energy (and those of others) in everyday life right from the start.

Who do YOU teach if there are masters out there?

Anyone who wishes sincerely to learn. The main reason I am called to teach here and now is because there are so few real masters where I live, and there is such a need! I sing the praises of a few local masters to my students and encourage them to find others to further their study, but there are too many frauds and game-players. It is ironic I associated with those I fought so hard against.

Part of my calling as a teacher now is to stress discernment in choosing where, how, and from whom you receive knowledge. My personal experience is a powerful asset to this.

What about openly challenging your "master"?

I have thought long and hard about this, and have counseled with many. If it is my destiny, so be it -- I have made my peace with my own death, and so there is nothing that can be taken away from me I would not willingly offer. However, I fail to see what a physical confrontation would prove, and am an extreme pacifist who would especially wish not to spill the blood of one I once called "Brother." I pray the truth speaks loudly, through me, and on my behalf.

What if you are challenged for not teaching with the authority of an existing system?

Isn't this how they all started? I accept only unconditional challenges for the purpose of learning. I hope to lose, also, as it is often better to be "taught a lesson" than to "teach someone a lesson." Someday I wish to earn the respect of Masters in the martial arts community, and study under them whenever possible.

Dear Ken,

After reviewing your letter dated 1/11/1997, I am sorry for any misunderstanding this has caused you. I do not remember any of the names mentioned in your letter, let alone know them. You must understand that in the last 20 years I have taught over 50,000 students in my workshops and retreats around the world with over 400 certified instructors and practitioners, and over 10 books in print. It is a possibility that I might have met in my travels, but I do not remember them at all; and I do not give any prescriptions to anyone, let alone over the phone. It is impossible to control anyone who misuses the material that I provide to the public, only the Tao can balance this.

I have enclosed a list of certified instructors in New York state, if wish to further your understanding of the Tao. I trust you will take this information and use it wisely.

Sincerely,

Master Mantak Chia

Mr. Ken JP Stuczynski

Dear Mr. Stuczynski:

We are in receipt of your letter of inquiry dated 27 August 1996 requesting information on the validity, nature, and extent of any relationship that is purported to exist between the undersigned and a Mr. David James Moerler.

Your story would be curious and somewhat amusing were it not for the fact that we've had many similar incidents occur since we instituted our mailorder division in 1986. Unfortunately, this kind of charade has been an indigencous and pervasive problem in the history of the Oriental Martial Arts - i.e., individuals of questionable integrity attempt to acquire some semblance of credibility by claiming association with teachers and/or organizations that have an impeccable reputation.

As a source of unique and rare teaching materials, Green Dragon has provided access to legitimate kung-fu fighting forms and power enhancement programs literally unavailable elsewhere, and, hence, we've attracted those wishing to establish authenticity for themselves without basis in fact, and who are attempting therefore to do so on a dishonest, and, in some cases, illegal manner.

If your description of the circumstances is accurate, such seems to be the case with Mr. Moerler. As you may be aware, Green Dragon has produced some 120+ instructional videotapes on all aspects of kung-fu which are now in circulation throughout the world. If one were to purchase the right cross-section of these, it could represent a comprehensive system of materials at all levels, beginner through highly advanced, that would support a curriculum of instruction that could span 20 years of teaching. This fact has not been missed by any number of 'would be kung-fu masters' who would appropriate the aura of Green Dragon's earned celebrityship simply by purchasing a few tapes, practicing some of the material, and demonstrating it to unsuspecting people while claiming a personal relationship with us.

Mr. Moerler has ordered four (4) instructional videos from us: the Stone Warrior and Iron Vest exercise programs in October 1995, and the Brass Hammer/Iron Anvil 2-Man combat set and 'Three Short Forms' in March of this year. To his credit, those were excellent choices; however, apart from being a customer there has been no communication of any kind between Mr. Moerler and Green Dragon personnel apart from processing his orders!

Obviously, I can't speak to his training experience or knowledge acquired from other sources. However, since he feels this falsification is necessary to attain impressive credentials, it strongly suggests he has nothing else to fall back on. Some of our students perceive such efforts at subterfuge to be a form of flattery; however, such deception not only dishonors the perpetrator, it likewise reflects on Green Dragon if his treatment of the material is inept - a most likely prospect when you consider the time, attention, and energy that must be devoted to programs like the Stone Warrior before you can adequately represent the broad range of benefits that it can produce.

I can't address Mr. Moerler's motives and intentions, other than to judge them highly questionable. A strong desire to teach classical kung-fu to others is certainly admirable, but preparation for that is years in the undertaking. Sooner or later those who lay claim to erroneous accomplishment and declare skills and abilities that they really don't possess will be exposed as fakes, often in an unpleasant manner when their counterfeit achievements become obvious as such.

Under normative conditions, Green Dragon personnel are not concerned about validating issues of rank, lineage, ancestry, historical associations, etc.; however, not having details regarding what claims Mr. Moerler is making, I've included several photographs with this letter and the pertinent information relative to them.
